BERLIN ASSAULTED AGAIN BY BRITISH MOSQUITO BOMBERS; EUROPE BOMBED BY DAYLIGHT

Targets in Northern France Attacked During the Night
—Mines Laid in Enemy Waters — Strong Formations of Bombers Escorted by RAF Fighters Head Toward France.

By International News Service
LONDON, Jan. 5—Berlin was assaulted by British Mosquito bombers again last night and Allied multi-engined bombers were reported to have swept out from England again today to pursue the relentless bombardment of Europe by daylight.

Bomber command aircraft, an official Air Ministry communiqué said, attacked targets in northern France during the night while the Mosquitos struck at objectives in Berlin and western Germany. Mines also were laid in enemy waters. None of the night bombers was lost.

The cross-channel aerial offensive, according to the Evening Standard, was taken up again early in the day when strong formations of bombers, escorted by RAF fighters, headed toward France.

A short time later official sources announced that Allied medium bombers blasted military objectives in northern France this morning. The bombardment squadrons operated under a screen of fighter ships. During the afternoon, Allied fighters kept the offensive rolling with undiminished fury.

THE WAR AT A GLANCE

By International News Service
A sudden reversal of part of the Russian drive in the central Ukraine threatened today to trap an estimated million German soldiers within the Dnieper bend and along the lower reaches of that stream.

While hard-bitten Cossack patrols pressed as far as seven miles beyond the old Polish border, elements of Gen. Nikolai Vatutin's First Ukrainian army turned at right angles to the forces sweeping into Poland and toward Romania. Taking Byelaya Tserkov, considered the hinge of Nazi defense positions south of Kiev, this Red army force swept onward to seize more than 40 other towns and villages in a drive apparently aimed at the vital communications center of Kirovograd.

In turning their attention against that point, the Russians advanced in a southeasterly direction and threatened to cut off escape for some 750,000 German troops battling within the bend of the mighty Dnieper. Approximately 250,000 other Nazi were fighting along the lower reaches of the stream and in the Crimea.

Indicative of the peril of their position was a statement by the military expert for the London Daily Express. He wrote that unless the German high command launches a full-scale counter-offensive within the week, the Nazis will have to re-establish their line as far back as Odessa on the Black Sea.

Should the new Soviet surge progress as rapidly as did Vatutin's main drive, which—in all days—

ANNUAL REVIEW--

ARRIVAL OF NEW YEAR FINDS LAND, SEA AND AIR FORCES APPROACHING PEAK OF STRENGTH

By Joseph A. Bors

CL. N. S. Staff Correspondent
WASHINGTON, Jan. 5—(INS)—

The arrival of a new year found

American land, sea and air forces rapidly approaching their peak in fighting strength and striking power, foreshadowing the beginning of the end for Germany and Japan.

Startling military developments were expected in rapid succession

during the coming months following a year of smashing victories for Allied forces on practically every fighting front throughout the world.

Highlights of the past 12 months, of course, were the Russian successes, America's attainment of sea-air superiority against Japan and the collapse and unconditional surrender of the weakest Axis partner,

Italy.

Much credit for the Allied victories must go to America's amazing production record which permitted shipment of huge quantities of war materials and supplies to the United Nations and Russia.

Meanwhile America during its second year of war built up its Airmy fighting strength to approximately 7,600,000 officers and men and its Navy to more than 800 battleships, carriers, cruisers, destroyers, submarines and escort vessels.

Airplane factories also began to hit their stride during the past year, finally passing the 8,000 mark in monthly output, a feat once considered impossible.

Americans and the world also got a good preview during this period of the Allied grand strategy to crush Germany first and then to unleash the full fury of their might against Japan.

The global Allied war plan began to unfold in November, 1942, when American and British troops invaded Europe.

ACCEPTING BAD NEWS

That the grimmest period of the current war lies immediately ahead cannot be denied, and there is no point in trying to sugarcoat that fact.

It is the opinion of Gen. Peyton C. March, chief of staff during World War I, that this country is in for a shock when the able-bodied men start pouring out and the wounded soldiers start pouring in, and for that reason he is in favor of telling the people the truth about the terrible struggle the nation faces. If the people don't learn soon enough, he said, the result may be too shocking to contemplate.

On the same day on which General March voiced his opinion, Palmer Hoyt, director of the domestic branch of the Office of War Information, said that more realism in reporting the day-to-day grimness of the war would be far more effective in conditioning the people for what lies ahead than prophecies about the losses which the nation faces.

Mr. Hoyt cited the coverage of the battle of Tarawa as an example of the way the public should be served with day-to-day news, and said it is this type of coverage which brings Americans closest to the reality of war, adding that Technicolor films of the battle will be released to the public in a few weeks.

It is possible that there is more concern over conditioning the American people for casualties than is needed, because the citizens of this country are realistic. They know that the nation has been at war for two years and they hardly expect, in view of the receipt of news of casualties each day, that losses will not mount as the intensity of fighting and the extensiveness of the battlefronts increase. American people underwent a lot of "conditioning" when they saw their sons and daughters placed in the armed services and sent off to Africa, Sicily, Italy, the Southwest Pacific and other areas.

Even though no government authority announced the probable number of casualties to be expected, say, in a cross-Channel invasion, many American civilians would nevertheless make predictions in their own right regarding what type of battle it will be, concerning the probable number of men involved and the likelihood of sharp losses. After all, the First World War is still in the memory of everyone 35 years of age or older and they know that even that comparatively short one-front war brought considerable casualties to the United States.

But there is one point that these "conditioners" of the American public overlook, and that is the fact that it is as necessary to build up the spirit of the people of a fighting nation as it is to confront them with word pictures and photographs of the cruelty of war.

It is the spirit of man which makes him able to undergo suffering, to endure hardships and to face disease and wounds and death.

Lard Gives Rich Flavor To Biscuits

Only a few ingredients are used in baking powder biscuits but each of them is as important as the method of mixing, says Jessie Alice Cline, home economist.

Lard is the perfect shortening to use for tender, fluffy, golden brown baking powder biscuits, she states, the amount of lard used determining the richness of the biscuits. Biscuits to serve with meals or as a topping on meat pies require less shortening than shortcake.

Both the lard and the milk should be cold. Less milk is used for rolled biscuits, more for drop biscuits. The mixing, rolling, and cutting should be done as quickly and with as little handling as possible.

Baking Powder Biscuits

2 cups flour

2 teaspoons baking powder

1 teaspoon salt

2 tablespoons lard (or for shortcake)

2/3 to ¾ cup milk

Mix and sift dry ingredients. Cut in lard with two knives or with a pastry blender until mixture has the consistency of coarse corn meal. Add the milk. Stir well with a fork until the dough clings in a ball. Turn on a lightly floured surface and knead lightly for one-half minute. Pat or roll one-half inch thick and cut with small biscuit cutter dipped in flour. Place on baking sheet and bake in hot oven (450 degrees F.) for 12 to 15 minutes. Drop biscuits, add more milk and drop from spoon onto greased baking sheet or into small muffin tins.

Arrival of New Year Finds Land, Sea and Air Forces Approaching Strength Peak

ed French North Africa and moved eastward to trap German and Italian desert armies from the British Eighth Army.

The trend of subsequent events became apparent on May 13, when an Axis army of more than 200,000 surrendered on Cape Bon in North Africa, where they had been stranded by the enemy's inability to supply or reinforce them.

In June the greatest invasion armada in history converged from Mediterranean ports on the important Italian island of Sicily, and in use of such costumes, this covering cost of cleaning the gowns. Thus many a bride who would otherwise have been forced to be wed in her service uniform can now have the traditional white.

The costumes, made or purchased by various clubs, are sent to General Federation of Women's Clubs Headquarters in Washington, D. C., so they may be directed to the proper authorities. The stipulation is that all gowns must be new.

The Travel Club Juniors, having many members with talents as costumers, decided to make their gown, and by the end of this week it will be well underway.

The local club is particularly proud of its contribution, especially in view of the fact that Juniors in some states are pooling their resources to send one gown from a state.

At night heavy British bombers in armadas ranging up to nearly 1,000 swept over cities in the Ruhr and other key points.

Before the smoke could clear away the following day, American Liberators and Flying Fortresses took up the job of destruction.

In mid-summer, President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill and their military and naval leaders met in Quebec for a conference that promised a stepping up of the war against Japan.

As a matter of fact, the drive against Japan already was gaining momentum.

The year 1943 began slowly in the Pacific with the crushing of all Japanese resistance on Guadalcanal. This was followed by a period in which Allied positions were consolidated and expanded for new blows.

The expanding American navy and air forces then began to whip the Japanese at widely separated points to prevent the Japs from concentrating their power in one spot.

On May 11 a powerful invasion armada backed up by battleships and a carrier struck against the enemy-held American island of Attu. U. S. Army troops in about one month cleaned up the entire Jap garrison of nearly 3,000.

Even while the Attu campaign back, in abject terror. Then, suddenly, there was a sound again. Stray. Not growling any longer. Piercingly—mournfully.

The eerie sound made things worse and yet broke the tension.

"Of all the lowdown tricks! Sending a man here to frighten us! In the middle of a storm too!" I broke out furiously.

"You think they—they just wanted to—scare us?" Linda stammered through chattering teeth.

"What else? Isn't that enough?" I challenged.

"I don't know. That man—maybe he was sent to—to kill—" The word ended in sheer fright.

This wouldn't do. The girl was working herself up into hysterics.

"Snap out of it, Linda!" I said sharply, with an assurance I didn't feel. "It's over. Whoever the man was, and whatever he meant to do—he's gone, and we must get some sleep. Come on. Let's go to my room. The bed is it's wide enough for a regiment."

Presently we were busy barricading ourselves. Pushing everything we could move in front of the door. And when we had done that, there still remained the problem of Stray.

I kept on howling. Nothing I said or did, no amount of petting silenced him. He was shivering with terror, and the hair around his neck stuck up stiffly.

At last I became desperate. Picking Stray up, struggling and squirming, under one arm, and tucking his quilt under the other, I ventured into the dark corridor once more, pushing dog and quilt into a room far down on the other side of the hall, and raced back to the comparative safety of our furniture strength.

And then—after securing the bathroom door also—I lay awake... wishing myself thousands of miles away, with Lee, in South America. Feeling I must protect Linda. Promising myself a talk—and what a talk!—with Linwood in the morning. Straining my ears for a repetition of the groans, the possible return of the intruder.

But nothing happened. There was only the drowsy gurgling of water in the gutters of the porch roof, now and then the heavy "plip" of a big rain drop, weighted with calcining, splashing down from the leak in the corner of the ceiling. And, very faintly—perhaps I only imagined it—Stray's muffled howling.

Both of us were at Linda's window in a jump. I, pushing the flashlight out between the two halves of the rusty adjustable screen and directing it downward.

The noise of the window slamming down coincided with my action, and the next instant I picked out the figure of a man; tall, in a light suit, with his collar turned up and a visored cap pulled down over his ears.

His arms flew up, shielding his face, as the light struck him. He ducked and vanished in the night. I couldn't turn my flashlight quickly enough, hampered by the screen, to find him again. But I had made out that he hadn't run toward the theatre and the inn but toward the right, where the woods crowded our ramshackle shelter.

With his disappearance the stillness was complete again. There were no more groans downstairs. Even the storm had ceased.

I had expected resistance, playfully energetic. But to my surprise he lay down at once, thumping his tail as if to say, "This suits me fine,"

CHAPTER ELEVEN

The bath was nothing but a large closet, really. Windowless, but with a second door to the hall. And as I went after Stray, I left this open door, and only closed the shutters attached to it for better ventilation, before I put down a quilt and invited Stray to make himself comfortable.

HIGH SCHOOL DRIBBLERS LOSE OPENING GAME, BEING DEFEATED BY FLORENCE HIGH QUINTET

Failing completely in the second half, the Bristol High dribblers lost their opening game of the season last night on the local court as it bowed to the Florence High School quintet, 30-18.

It was a disastrous second half plus poor marksmanship from the foul line that made the Bristol defeat appear worse than it was. In the first half of the contest, the Bunnies held the Jerseyites to a 14-14 count despite its failure to convert a foul.

Even at the close of the first quarter, Bristol was ahead, 6-5, but at the start of the third period, Florence began to score at will while Bristol seemed to play the game of missing the basket or trying to see how many foul shots it could attempt without making any points.

In the second half, the best the Bristol team could do was to score twice from the field and in all attempted a total of 15 foul tries without converting one. Of its nine field goals, four went to Henry VanLenten while another pair was credited to Marvin Collins.

For the winning aggregation, Wurcisin had a quintet of double-deckers to lead the scorers while Bintiff was close behind with seven points.

Although it played a closer game than the varsity team did, the Bristol junior varsity proved just as much adapted to missing foul goals. It had but three opportunities to convert from the foul line and success in any one of the tries would have at least tied the score as the Jay Vees lost to the Florence Jay Vees, 17-16.

The Florence team built a 16-6 lead at half-time and at the close of the third period was still ahead by four points, 16-12. Potpinka made a foul which made the score 17-12. This conversion, however, proved to be the winning counter of the game as the Bristol team scored twice to come within a point of tying the count. Within the last thirty seconds of the game, Bristol had four opportunities to score and hit the basket each time but the ball failed to fall through the rim.

Leading the Bristol attack was Bowen who scored one-half the points and DeLise who had a pair of double-deckers. Potpinka who scored the winning point was high man for Florence with nine points. Line-ups:
